Join us at our in-person and virtual C20 Side Event – a Global Public Health Convention for the 21st Century – where expert panelists will show why Group of 20 (G20) leaders must develop a comprehensive public health framework that promotes cooperation, transparency, and accountability among countries to respond to current and future health emergencies.

In under a decade, the world has seen widescale outbreaks of infectious diseases of international concern, such as Ebola, Zika, COVID-19, and monkeypox. These outbreaks are occurring while long-running epidemics remain unresolved and underfunded, including AIDS, TB, and malaria, the re-emergence of polio and measles, and a resurgence of sexually transmitted diseases, such as syphilis.

This C20 Side Event will allow us to hear from leading global public health thinkers about why infectious diseases need global solutions, which the G20 must urgently address to redefine and restructure public health.
